INSTRUCTIONS FOR CONTRIBUTORS

Editorial Policies

THE purpose of Agricultural Science Review is to provide research workers and administrators an authoritative source of information on published research relating to selected facets of agriculture, research in progress, trends in research, and management of research programs.

Although review articles are naturally most valuable to those researchers in the discipline with which the review is concerned, those outside the discipline may also benefit—but only if authors recognize that a scientist is somewhat of a layman outside his own field. Within such a framework, therefore, a review article can perform the following functions:

- Improve communications within a discipline.
- Stimulate research efforts.
- Evaluate existing and proposed research.
- Coordinate knowledge among administrators.
- Provide other areas of science with a better understanding of agricultural research as a significant force in technological advancement and growth of scientific knowledge.

Upon request, the editors will furnish potential contributors a more detailed statement on the functions of reviews and the various types that may be written. Although most manuscripts are written on assignment, all unsolicited manuscripts will be considered for publication. Study carefully the style and format of articles in recent issues of Review.

Agricultural Science Review also welcomes letters and short items for use in Forum. Authors are permitted a wide latitude in expressing their beliefs, opinions, and doubts concerning topics on which they are qualified to speak authoritatively.

Articles are usually submitted to two or three qualified technical reviewers for evaluation. Authors will be notified of acceptance, rejection, or need for revision within 2 or 3 weeks.

Review does not furnish authors with galley proofs. Instead, a duplicate copy of the final draft is sent to the author at the same time copy for an issue is sent to the printer. The editorial office assumes the responsibility of seeing that galleys agree with the author's final corrected copy.

Authors desiring reprints should notify the editor in advance of publication. A modest supply will be furnished at no cost.

Manuscripts

CRITICAL review manuscripts may be any length necessary to cover the topic adequately, although a desirable average is 15-20 typed pages. Submit only one ribbon copy, double-spaced; a carbon is not necessary. Try not to break paragraphs. Insert subheads at appropriate places in the text. Put each table on a separate sheet. Place tables and figure captions after the first reference to them.

Review rarely uses photos and requests that authors keep tabular material and literature citations to the very minimum. Citations should be numbered and listed alphabetically. Eight or more references should be grouped together in a Literature Cited section; use footnotes for less than eight citations.

Review publishes short biographical sketches of all authors of major articles. Submitting your own biographical data will help to avoid delay and assure having an up-to-date sketch. Follow the format used in any recent issue.
